The Savanna in the Sahara died as the earth warmed and the people of the northeastern Sahara were forced to the valley of the Nile. There they abandoned their Paleolithic life of hunting and gathering and adapted to the cycles of the river. This provided a deep-set regularity in to the Egyptian culture which began farming and building settlements by about 7000BC
